Sport in Australia.

The majority of Australians love sport. It's part of their culture. This is helped by the good weather. Everyone knows that Australians are surf crazy but what else do they do?

Because Australia has so many lifeguards, they have their own competitions and demonstrate their skills. There are also Iron Man Competitions. Competitors have to swim, paddle a rescue boat then run along the sand.

Australian football is like eighteen-a-side football but you are allowed to throw the ball. It is played with an oval ball that players jump high in the air to catch. The game is famous for its fights on the pitch. There's usually lots of injury time at the end.

The Henley-on-Todd Regatta is a boat race in Alice Springs with a difference; there's no water! Specially designed boats race where the water used to be. If the riverbank actually fills with water, the race is cancelled!

Australians love watching racing. Speedway is very popular. So is horseracing. The Melbourne Cup is Australia's most famous horse race and is watched by a large percentage of the population.

Australia hopes to do well in every Olympics. The AIS (Australian Institute of Sport) invests a huge amount of money in sport. Every year they search Australian schools for children who might be good at a particular sport. Then they spend millions of dollars training them. They test most schoolchildren and tell them what sports to concentrate on in the future.
